ABSTRACT

A project established a lending library of literacy materials for Tri-County Opportunities Industrialization Center, Inc. (OIC) students who attended classes at over 20 satellite locations in Dauphin and Perry Counties, Pennsylvania. A student survey determined the types of materials of most interest. Results were compiled into categories such as: Beginning Readers; Consumer Information; Health Issues; Parenting Skills; Science Phenomena; Test-Taking Tips; Best Sellers; Self-Improvement; Reference Materials; Civics; Folktales; Mysteries; Science; and Social Studies. The survey also identified the kinds of magazines to be chosen for the library. Materials that were already in house and were in the selected categories were catalogued. Additional materials that were of high interest were procured for the lending library. A database of available materials in the lending libraries was created and from it "minicatalogues" were generated. These catalogues were usually generated at the request of teachers or students. A catalogue was designed, printed, and delivered to students through the teachers and by mail. Students could request books from the catalogue by filling out the request form and returning it to the teacher. In order for students to feel comfortable requesting books on confidential subjects, they had the option of having the books mailed to their homes. A user's survey and a teacher's survey were used to measure project effectiveness. (Appendixes include project forms and survey instruments. A copy of the catalogue is provided. It lists 464 books, magazines, audiotapes, and videotapes for adult learners and their families. An alphabetical index of titles is included.) (YLB)

Title: A Literacy Lending Library

Funding: $7,690

Project Director: Jeffrey Woodyard

Project Implementors: Carolyn Wisman, David Wisman

Phone Number: (717) 238-7318

Agency Address: 1600 Market Street - Harrisburg, Pennsylvania 17103

Description:

The purpose of this project was to establish a lending library of literacy materials for OIC students who attend classes at our satellite classes.

Objectives:

1) Catalogue available materials for the lending library

2) Procure additional materials

3) Publish a listing of materials in the lending library

4) Circulate and monitor the use of the materials

5) Disseminate a final report

Target Audience:

OIC students

Product(s) - if applicable:

Catalogue of books available

Method(s) Evaluation:

Final survey and usage report

Findings:

n/a

Conclusion:

Originally this project was designed for students who attend classes off site. It was believed that since these students were not able to come to the OIC building to make use of the textbooks and other library materials that were available, they would be more inclined to make use of the lending library. Not only were the students who attended satellite classes enthusiastic about the project, students who attended classes on site were equally enthusiastic. The library offered a confidential, non-threatening way for the students and their families to access information of interest.

Overview

Most of the 1,000 students who attend classes at Tri-County OIC do so by going to a neighborhood class sites. OIC offers classes at over 20 satellite locations in Dauphin and Perry counties. These classes are located in public housing developments, senior citizens' centers, homeless shelters, work sites, churches, and community centers. As a result, most OIC students never visit OIC's main headquarters in Harrisburg.

A collection of library books, textbooks, periodicals, and other resource materials are located at the main office. Until this project was completed, students at the satellite classes had no way of knowing what materials were available, nor did they have any way to access the materials.

Under this project, OIC developed a resource catalogue of available materials. Students used the catalogue to select materials of interest. Selected materials were either mailed to students' homes or given to their instructor to be handed out in class.

The most important aspect of the lending library was that it did not contain any materials that were traditional used in the classroom. While some of the subject matter of the books in the library may have been appropriate for the classroom, the actual textbooks used in the class were not available in the library. Students identified material by interest, need, or just curiosity. Choosing from subjects that were relevant to their needs, and not classroom related gave students the freedom and opportunity to learn more about matters that were most important to them.

Our program serves all levels of readers: 0-4, 5-8, 9-12, and 12+. The materials in the lending library had to cover those reading levels as well as be of interest to as many students as possible. We made no effort to determine the reading levels of the materials. Nor did we try to identify which students might find any particular materials appropriate. If asked by students, teachers would recommend materials based on their knowledge of the student, but it was entirely the student's decision as to what material he/she thought appropriate to borrow.

The literacy lending library project encouraged reading for pleasure, reading for information, and reading to meet the personal needs of the learners and their families.

Target Audience

This project, while designed for adult learners at Tri-County OIC, could be adapted/ adopted by other literacy providers who similarly offer classroom instruction at more than one site. Because of the wide range of materials selected and the range of academic levels addressed, any adult learning center could replicate this project.

Project Activities and Methods by Objectives

Objective 1

⇒ To catalogue available materials for circulation

Action Step 1- Survey Areas of Interest

Survey students in a variety of class types (ABE, ESL, GED, workplace, etc.) to determine the types of materials of most interest. The survey document that was used by OIC is attached as Appendix I. This simple instrument given to a representative sample of students was used to determine the most common general areas of interest. The survey also gave students the opportunity to list additional areas of interest. In addition to surveying students, counselors, instructors, tutors and aides should also be surveyed. Their perspective of the needs of students, particularly as they relate to eliminating barriers to participation in class, is helpful in identifying materials that relate to social, economic, and consumer issues.

Action Step 2 - Compile Survey Results

The results of the survey should be compiled and sorted using as many different categories as needed to cover all the types of literacy materials requested. Select those areas identified most often and appropriate for your students. For this project these areas were chosen:

Beginning Readers	Best Sellers	Biographies	Civics
Consumer Information	Current Events	Family Literacy	Folktales
Health Issues	History	How To...	Mysteries
Parenting Skills	Personal Values	Reference Materials	Science
Science Phenomena	Self-Improvement	Short Classics	Social Studies
Test-Taking Tips	Travel	World of Work

The tally sheet used for this step is attached as Appendix II.

The survey also helped the project implementors to identify the kinds of magazines chosen for the library. Most students who responded to the survey were able to identify specific magazines of interest, others were able to state only the general area of interest. The project implementors had to identify magazines that covered the wide interests of the students. Some discretion may need to be exercised in selecting magazines. Some of the suggestions made by students would appeal only to a limited number of students, and, therefore, may not justify the cost of purchasing the magazine subscription. Based on the survey results these magazines were chosen:

Better Homes and Gardens	Consumer Report	Creative Kids
Ebony Magazine	Entertainment Weekly	Essence Magazine
Jet	Life	National Geographic
Newsweek	Parenting Magazine	Parents Magazine
Time Magazine	Vogue	Woman's Day
Working Mother	Working Woman

Action Step 3 - Identify Available Materials

Materials that are already in-house and fall into the selected categories were cataloged. For this project, OIC used a commercial data base program (PcFile). This inexpensive (IBM-compatible) program comes with a ready-made template for cataloguing library books. A copy of the entry fields and brief description of each is attached as Appendix III. Programs that do not have access to computers will find it easy to use a filing system that includes colored index cards (or some other color coding system such as colored labels) to identify the various subject areas.

The project implementors for this project, both of whom were former GED students, served as data input operators. The former students were able to lend a perspective to the project that may not have been possible if only instructional staff were used. The students were able to help categorize the materials into areas that were meaningful to other students.

Several liberties were taken in placing materials into the various categories. We did this so that students could find the materials in the categories that reflected their use rather than the writing style or subject matter of the material. As a result, we used categories such as "Self-Improvement," "Beginning Readers," "Family Literacy," and "How To..." to help the students better identify and locate the library materials.

After reviewing the survey results and completing a comprehensive list of available materials, the project implementors were ready to begin ordering additional materials.

Objective 2

⇒ To procure additional materials for the lending library

Action Step 1 - Gather Adult Education Catalogues and Order Appropriate Materials

The project implementors used several adult education catalogues to find materials that were of high interest to our students. The results of the surveys helped the project implementors to identify materials.

The majority of materials were ordered from the following book companies:

Arco Publishers	Barnell Loft, LTD	Bureau of At-Risk Youth	Contemporary Books
Globe	Krames Communications	Lake Publishers	Regents Publishing
Rosen Publishing	Scott Foresman Company	Steck-Vaughn Book Company

Each of these companies, in addition to selling preparatory instructional materials, has a considerable collection of adult-centered materials in the general areas of interests that were identified by our students. In ordering the materials the project implementors did not pay particular attention to the grade levels as indicated by the book publishers. We were more concerned about finding materials in the areas that interested the students. It has been our experience that if the subject matter is of interest to the learner, they have a strong tendency to be able to read materials at slightly higher grade levels than the level at which they may have been diagnosed by a formal assessment.

Action Step 2 - Visit Local Book Stores

After placing orders with the book companies, the project implementors made several visits to local book stores. Many of the books in the subject areas that were of interest to the students could be found only in stores that sell current titles. Areas of interest such as biographies, "how to" books, best sellers, and reference materials are best purchased from retail chains such as B. Dalton, Waldenbooks, and Encore book stores.

When selecting books keep in mind your population's

- age
- family status
- ethnicity
- work status
- religious diversity
- economic status

Try to choose books that will allow them not only to learn more about their own history and circumstances, both those of others as well. Travel books, fables from other lands, religious tales, ethnic cook books, and biographies work well to accomplish this.

Objective 3

⇒ To publish a listing of available materials in the lending library for students.

Action Step 1 - Identify Storage Media

The first step in creating a data base was to identify a storage system for the information. Those who have computers will find it easy to input data on a simple data base. As previously mentioned, for our project we used PC-File. Several versions of this popular program exist. Several of the earlier versions are available on shareware. Shareware is an inexpensive way to purchase software for review and possible use. If you decide to use the shareware, you are requested to pay a nominal registration fee, sometimes as low as $5.

The PC-File version that we used (version 7.0) came with a predefined library cataloguing data base. The fields used for this data base are attached as Appendix III. This data base can be modified to add or delete fields that are appropriate for your project. Projects who do not use computers could simply replicate the appropriate data entry fields on index cards.

Action Step 2 - Data Input

The project implementors were responsible for data input. Data input does not require great familiarity with computers. Neither of our project implementors consider themselves "computer literate," but with a few simple instructions, they were able to access the data base and type in the required information. This project actually served as a non-threatening way to introduce them to computers.

Data input is an ongoing process. As new books are received they should be placed on the data base immediately. By placing them on your data base you can provide current listings of available materials at any time.

Action Step 3 - Generate Catalogues

From the data base of information we were able to generate "mini-catalogues." These catalogues were usually generated at the request of teachers or students who wanted a listing of available materials by a author, book company, area of interest, etc. The request form labeled Appendix IV was used to generate such a report. Appendix V is an example of a mini-catalogue of family literacy materials.

This step is important if you plan to allow students to use the library materials as they are received rather than when the project is completed. Since obtaining materials was an ongoing process, we felt that is was important to get feedback from the students regarding the type of materials we were purchasing. In addition, we did not want to wait until project end to allow students to begin borrowing library materials.

Objective 4

⇒ To circulate and monitor the use of the materials

Action Step 1 - Layout and Dissemination

Under this final objective, the project implementors designed the layout for the final lending catalogue. The information was pulled from the data based into a publishing program. (For this project we used Publish It.) Any similar program will allow you to customize your own catalogue. For something less involved, you could consider using WordPerfect. WordPerfect has a macro that will arrange your information in a book-like manner. When printed, the pages can be folded into a sequentially numbered booklet or pamphlet.

After the final catalogue was printed and duplicated, the project implementors reviewed the contents of the catalogue with each instructor. Instructors were given several copies to distribute among their students. Because of the number of students who attend classes, it was not possible to give a catalogue to each student. The students could, however, take the catalogues home and review them at their leisure. This process worked well. Since the materials contained in the catalogue were, for the most part, not classroom related, it was important for the students to be able to browse through the catalogue with their families and children.

In addition to distributing the catalogues, the project implementors encouraged instructors to take representative samples of the books to their classes. Seeing the actual books encouraged more students to participate. Teachers would simply take a variety of books to their different classes and students could select the books which appealed to their interests.

Action Step 2 - Delivery

Two methods were used to deliver the books to the students: through the teachers and by mail. Students could request books from the catalogue by filling out the request form. The form was returned to their teacher. The teacher, in turn, delivered the request form to the project implementors. The project implementors filled the request for books. The books were given to the teacher to hand out to the students in class. This method worked very well. Teachers were able to recommend books and encourage students to use the lending library.

The second delivery method was by mail. We felt that this option, while expensive, was important. Some of the titles of the books in the library dealt with very personal issues (sex education, child abuse, drug and alcohol addiction, etc.). In order for students to feel comfortable requesting these books, we gave students the option of having the books mailed to their homes. Many students made use of this option.

Each student who used the library received a certificate of participation. The certificate (See Appendix VI) could also be used as a bookmark. Certificates were issued on a monthly basis to each student who had used the library that month. Many students received multiple certificates of participation.

Project Evaluations

Two evaluations were used to measure the effectiveness of this project. The first, a user's survey. (Appendix VII) This survey was given to all library users. The survey was used to give the project implementors an indication of the appropriateness of the materials, how often materials were borrowed, the impact the materials had on family members, and suggestions for acquiring additional materials.

The second survey, for teachers, (Appendix VIII) measured the delivery method, the appropriateness of the materials, suggestions for additional materials, and the impact on classroom activities.

Conclusions

While this was a relatively straightforward project to design, develop, and deliver, it had a more complex impact on the students. Learners who had never been to a library before became interested in going. Learners who had concerns about family and personal matters but had no way of accessing information about these problems openly borrowed books about the most serious of subjects. Learners who simply wanted to read a current best seller, but could not afford to purchase even a paperback version, were able to borrow the most popular books available at the time. The learners were interested in a variety of topics and showed an eagerness to learn. It is highly recommended that programs who have similar off-site or satellite locations consider starting such a lending library to involve their learners in the joy of reading.
